Monday night.

My Violet,

There is really no change - it Anything he is a little better.
his temperature is lower.
But we know nothing, & we can only wait. Perhaps

Reggie will tell us more.
I myself think that he will get through this - It would be best not, I know. He seems weaker today, but of course that is natural.
He is lying in his room, reading a letter

Adrian is here - poor little boy - he has guessed nothing. & he is terribly upset. though he says hardly anything.

Oh dear - if we only hadn't got to wait for weeks to come, but this is what I dread.

I will telegraph at once what Reggie says. He must know more.

S. A. S.
I wish you weren't coming up earlier. If anybody can do anything you can - but I know we shall have just to keep on as usual.

My Mother,

Here is your - not much good I am afraid. Wellly don't feel enthusiastic; says it's 'hard end' for the Guardian.
& I have altered words to suit her. Bring it up tomorrow.

My Holst.

Willem has been twice again, but says there is no change.
His temp. is 103 at 6. tonight.
Willem says the early hours of the morning are the critical ones - it is just a push in here - often he can live through them - But he says his vitality is still great, & he does not expect any change tonight. Kitty came this evening again. I spent the afternoon driving with Beatrice, there is really a good woman.

C. M.
Come tomorrow - only don't if you feel too tired -

My Violet,

I meant to write her today, but there wasn't time. There is no change: he had a fair night, & the day is about the same.
He is very tired & sleeps a great deal, but is quite cheerful & when he wakes. He saw Rome today - He must see her tomorrow. Adrian is up today - much happier & more like himself I think. Last time it was all such a bad dream to him.

My Violet.

Watson says there's no change tonight. His pulse is a little stronger & anything - He thinks he sees people in the room some times, but when we said goodnight he was perfectly like himself.
Kitty came this evening, & her name was pleased - also Jack. Kitty was very nice, he's a sweet - I didn't see her.
